Well, there are a few things that will help get people interested in reading more of your blog post and head over to your website for more content. You can also answer any unanswered questions that were raised in the article with a brief explanation so readers know what they'll find if they continue on past the conclusion paragraph of your blog post. Here are some ways you can conclude an informative and factual blogpost: #End with an inspiring quote or thought: "The principal thing is not knowledge itself but skill. Knowledge, though it is beautiful, will not be of any use to you if you do not have skill." – Lao Tzu "To learn, I must experience the world. To be wise, I must reach beyond myself." – Homer "Analysis has a way of making what you think better than what it really is." – Thomas Szasz "In order to learn from history one must first have a history of learning from history." – Robert Anton Wilson #End with a little humor: "I just got a new haircut. It gives me an entirely new style. It's the same style, only different." – Steven Wright #End with a question: "If a cluttered desk is a sign of a cluttered mind, what is the significance of a clean desk?" – Albert Einstein "What do you think about abortion?" #End with a positive message: "We must believe in luck. For how else can we explain success?" – Jean Cocteau To conclude, there are many different ways to write an informative blogpost. Remember to focus on the most important details and make sure your post is easy to read and understand. When people find your blog post, they may decide to read more of your content, so it's important that you leave a positive first impression. Use a variety of methods to help people engage with the information you're writing about and ensure they have a good understanding of what you're trying to say. If you want, include a few conversation-starting questions near the end of the post that will entice interested readers to click on your URL and read more. Remember, though, if someone chooses not to continue reading, that's okay too because you've done what you were supposed to do: You've given them something worth reading. You've given them informative content. I never learned anything while I was talking". – Will Rogers The following references provide excellent examples of how to write an informative blogpost: <https://www.govtech.com/featured-stories/How-to-Write-a-Government-Informational-Blog.html> <https://www.engagemedia.com/blog/how-to-write-informative-blogging> <https://moz.com/blog/tips-for-writinginformative> https://www.thepunch.com.au/articles/how_to_write_an_informative_article <http://onlinebusinessideacoursereviews.com>
